From 1915 Gardiner contributed to The Star under the pseudonym Alpha of the Plough. At the time The Star had several anonymous essayists whose pseudonyms were the names of stars. Invited to choose the name of a star as a pseudonym he chose the name of the brightest (alpha) star in the constellation “the Plough.” His essays are uniformly elegant, graceful and humorous. His uniqueness lay in his ability to teach the basic truths of life in an easy and amusing manner. Leaves in the Wind is amongst his best known writings.

I am fortunate to possess his other essay books

By shreekant joshi

These essays were written over ninety five years ago, most of their subjects do not exist anymore. Despite this, the essays appear fresh, because the author's commentary about human nature, his observations about people, their thoughts, emotions are very perceptive and are true even today. While circumstances change, human nature does not change within just a hundred year. I am fortunate to possess his other essay books, Windfall, Pebbles on the shore, as well as Leaves in the wind in hard back editions which i had picked up for Rs 2/- something like 1 cent, but that was nearly fifty years ago. They are my cherished possessions.

A delightful reading for all the times.
